This pre-masterclass presentation is suitable for language teachers of all languages. It provides a theoretical overview of teaching language using Sequential Art, Improvisation, and Drama as communication mediums in the second language classroom. Sequential art is used in language lessons to enhance second language acquisition by incorporating visual storytelling. Masterclass. Language in Action™ A practical language workshop Language in Action™

... is a unique program by Stuart A Blair that introduces language students to the captivating world of comic book literature. The program stands out for its engaging approach, where students act out and craft a collective comic book adventure immersed in the words and sounds of the target language. In the practical workshop, teachers get a hands-on application of the theoretical concepts presented. They use improvisation, drama, scene selection, role-play, and sequential art techniques to create a series of short comic book adventures, incorporating grammar specific to the lesson focus. The program's emphasis on collaboration ensures that teachers work together in real-time to create a memorable learning experience, inspiring future lesson plans they can share with their students.

Language in Action™ is not just a class; it's an interactive experience. Learners actively understand and retain new vocabulary and language structures by combining images and words. This dynamic approach keeps students engaged and excited about their language journey, making them an integral part of the learning process.
